

SCREENPLAY

TITLE: THANKS, BOBO

Genre: Dramatic Micro-Comedy with a Soft Existential Belly

Runtime: 2.5 Minutes of Pure Intergenerational Brilliance

INT. LIVING ROOM - EARLY AFTERNOON

A beam of honey-colored sunlight cuts across a room littered with crayons, plush animals, and peace.

BOBO (50s, emotional philosopher disguised as a human grandparent) reclines on a couch, worn around the eyes. Across from him, GRANDDAUGHTER (4, mystical gremlin, eyes too big for this world) stands at the edge of childhood and betrayal.

She has just finished telling a story about her experience yesterday. There's a heavy pause.

GRANDDAUGHTER

When she said that... she hurt my feelings.

BOBO sits forward, solemn. The moment smells of purpose.

BOBO

Well, I have an important lesson to teach you.

GRANDDAUGHTER leans in, like a tiny disciple receiving prophecy.

GRANDDAUGHTER

(She lowers her voice almost to a whisper.)

Okay.

(She clips the end of the word and focuses intently. She is ready.)

BOBO takes a breath, surprised to actually have the floor

BOBO

Well... nothing she said can hurt you if you don't let it.

(a time-portal pause)

More importantly, the worse it hurts, the more clear it is that you actually feel that way about yourself, which is totally within your control once you learn that power, because you only feel that way about yourself because of a life paradigm you created when you were 8 or 10 uh-
(abrupt stop. dead silence. she is FOUR.)

BOBO blinks. Time rewinds.

BOBO

FADE TO ... nothing she said can hurt you if you don't let it.

(a time-portal pause)

Think of it this way...
Say someone called you a purple alien.
Would that hurt your feelings?

GRANDDAUGHTER frowns with gravity. She's not playing.
She draws out a sound like a small angry animal mixed with ancient wisdom.

GRANDDAUGHTER

Yeeaaaahhh... Uuuuuuuuu...

(unclear if it's one word or many, mouth never fully closes—she's thinking with her entire face.)

BOBO stares. The world stops.

BOBO

Oh.

(Their eyes are still locked. She hasn't blinked. Not once.)

Then I get where you're coming from.

GRANDDAUGHTER

(somehow still frowning with her forehead but otherwise a full grin)

Thanks Bobo!

And then she HUGS HIS NECK, fiercely, like she's blessing him with forgiveness for all adult confusion. She darts off.

BOBO sits in the silence.

He looks at the air like it just handed him a lesson he wasn't ready to understand.
He's not sure what just happened. But he knows it changed him.

FADE TO BLACK.

TITLE CARD: "Thanks, Bobo."

SUBTITLE: "Based on deeply real events. Mostly."

CLOSING SOUND: A soft "Yeeaaaahhh...Uuuuuuuuuu..." over gentle piano.